

International Institute for Learning (IIL) Launches New Business Analysis Curriculum to Rave Reviews

New York, NY – January 15, 2007 – International Institute for Learning, Inc., the leading global training company in the field of Project, Program and Portfolio Management, Six Sigma, and Microsoft Office Project, today announced that the new pilot Business Analysis Curriculum it launched in December has been declared a tremendous success by course participants in New York City and Toronto.

Customers from companies such as AT&T, JP Morgan Chase, Pfizer, AXA, and New York Life attended and many stated that they wanted to introduce the IIL courses into their organizations in 2007. Participant Nancy Romanelli from NY Life Insurance stated, "I enjoyed the class a great deal. The points were clearly laid out and articulated. The examples were very good and class exercises were valuable...." Maria Jamoulis from AXA stated, "Once again, I can not say how much I enjoyed this class. The process of drilling down a bit further on what had been taught in the first course was incredibly enlightening."

IIL's new Business Analysis Certificate Program consists of four courses that are mapped to International Institute of Business Analysis' Body of Knowledge (BABOK™). Required for the Certificate Program are:

- Business Analysis Fundamentals
- Facilitation Skills for Business Analysts
- Writing and Managing Requirements Documents
- Business Process Modeling

Other courses in the curriculum include Effecting Business Process Improvement, Developing the Business Case, and Assuring Quality Through Acceptance Testing.

"IIL is committed to growing and amending its curriculum along with IIBA™ Body of Knowledge," stated E. LaVerne Johnson, President and CEO of International Institute for Learning. "The development of a Business Analysis Body of Knowledge is an important development in the industry, and one that naturally complements the already well-established Project Management Institute's Project Management Body of Knowledge (PMBOK® Guide). We therefore see our Business Analysis curriculum as an exciting new addition to our portfolio of course offerings for our clients." Johnson concluded.

In each IIL Business Analysis course, participants learn information and skills that can immediately be applied in to real world issues, such as mitigating risks associated with requirements conflicts; how to conduct a formal requirements review; and selecting the right practices and resources to produce excellent requirements.

IIL's renowned, globally implemented teaching approach is collaborative in nature. It takes place within an environment of information sharing, which provides participants with opportunities to explore the application of new practices with other participants, while discussing how their current work situations compare to those from other organizations.

IIL will be offering free, one-hour webinars on business analysis topics. The first two webinars are scheduled for February 21, Utilizing Business Analysis for Project Management Success and March 1, Tips and Tricks for the Business Analyst. Both webinars are scheduled from 3:00-4:00PM, EST. For a complete listing of our webinars, please visit www.iil.com/webinars.

The IIL Business Analysis Certificate Program will be offered in New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Dallas and Toronto starting in March, 2007. Select courses will also be available through our live eLearning system.
