IIL Celebrates International Project Management Day™ 2008 Honoring Project Managers Worldwide

International Institute for Learning, Inc. to Present a Live Global Webcast

New York, NY, August 25, 2008 — International Institute for Learning, Inc. (IIL) is excited to celebrate International Project Management Day™ 2008, November 6, 2008. In honor of this day, IIL will be hosting a live global webcast, “Leading Projects in a Changing World,” on both November 5th 8:00pm–11:30pm EST and November 6th 11:00am–2:30pm EST, enabling viewing access to each global time zone’s business day.

Founded by Frank P. Saladis, PMP, International Project Management Day serves as an opportunity to increase the awareness of the value of project management and to recognize the contributions project managers make to their global organizations.

IIL’s webcast will focus on the value of leveraging project management as a core competency and project management excellence, and offer thousands of global participants the opportunity to interact with the presenters during a Q&A period. Attendees may register as an individual or a corporate group, and presentations will be delivered by senior executives from such key organizations as: NASA, Boeing and Accenture, and feature, Gregory Balestrero, President and CEO, Project Management Institute, and Dr. Harold Kerzner, Project Management guru, best-selling author, and Senior Executive Director, IIL.

“We are thrilled to celebrate International Project Management Day again this year. For us, this important day is an opportunity to publicly honor project managers worldwide and show our advocacy of this integral profession,” stated IIL’s President and CEO, E. LaVerne Johnson. “As part of our planned events, we are excited to host our global webcast that will showcase the importance of the project management function.”

IIL has also launched a website www.IPM-Day.com, specifically about International Project Management Day, and invites organizations to post and share inspiring stories about how they will show their recognition.
